

Fund Your Retirement In One Move

A passive, tax-free income stream that can last a lifetime, built on one of the world's most conservative asset classes — cash value life insurance. Not a 401(k), not a Roth, and not new.

What Makes This Different

Most retirement accounts trade one problem for another: a 401(k) defers your taxes into the future, when you have no idea what tax rates will look like. A Roth IRA caps how much you can contribute. This approach avoids both — properly structured, it builds retirement income that isn't taxed on the way out, with no income cap, and no exposure to a market downturn wiping out a decade of growth right before you need the money.

No market risk	Cash value is protected from downturns — it doesn't lose ground when markets do.
Tax-free income	Access to the money later isn't structured as taxable income.
Tax-free growth	Growth inside a properly structured policy isn't taxed as it accumulates.
Access to your cash	You keep the ability to borrow against the value if a real need comes up.
A legacy benefit	The policy can also leave a tax-free death benefit for your family.

The honest number: how much retirement income this builds depends entirely on your age, health, and how the policy is funded — there's no single number that applies to everyone, and anyone who gives you one before asking those questions is guessing. Your own numbers take about 15 minutes to run.

The One Line Worth Knowing

If a policy is overfunded too aggressively, it can get reclassified by the IRS as a Modified Endowment Contract — and the tax-free treatment disappears. Getting the funding pace right is a design question, not a guess, and it's the single most common way this strategy gets sabotaged before it ever has a chance to work.

Educational purposes only; not tax or legal advice. Policy loans and withdrawals reduce cash surrender value and death benefit and accrue interest. Tax-free treatment of policy loans assumes the policy remains in force and is not classified as a Modified Endowment Contract (MEC).
